civil litigation

Civil litigation is what lawyers like to call legal matters which involve a dispute between two parties. This could be because one party has failed to honour a term in a contract, or where both parties have differing views on events that have taken place.

Often, disagreements are resolved between the two parties without legal advice being sought. However, this is not always the case and sometimes representation by a solicitor may be required.

Once instructed, a solicitor can advise on whether the case has any merit and give guidance on the options available. These options could range from mediation to issuing proceedings at court.

Straight talking

We understand that any dispute can have a serious impact on the people involved and that practical, cost-effective advice is required.

We will meet with you, face-to-face where possible, and listen to your side of the story. Once we have the full facts, we will advise you on your prospects of success and, if the law is not on your side, we will tell you so.

We certainly won't recommend that you spend money on a case that we don't think you can win.

The types of litigation that we can help you with include:

- debt collection
- boundary disputes
- professional negligence
- contentious probates
- contractual disputes

Debt collection

Cash flow is crucial. If your customers aren't paying your bills, time that should be spent growing your business ends up being diverted elsewhere.

To help you concentrate on what's important, we offer a fixed fee debt collection service that enables you to hand over your aged debts and leave the rest to us.

The personal service

Many disputes are resolved very quickly once we become involved but sometimes it can take a bit longer.

Whatever the nature of your dispute, you are important to us, and we will always act in your best interests. Client satisfaction is our priority, which is why so many of our clients return to us again and again.
